An Eye for Golden Proportions

As the owner of a film & casting company in Las Vegas, Vanessa Chamberlin has a keen eye for talent, appeal, good looks and proportions. She used the same keen eye to find exactly the right cosmetic dentist to perfect her own smile.

"When you're in the movie business, you must know what is attractive to people", said Vanessa Chamberlin, co-owner of Buzzell Films and Vegas Casting. "You have to know just 'when' that something is right whether it's a person's face, a script or a director's vision."

Vanessa knows the business from nearly every angle. In her career she's been an actress, a model, a casting director, a producer, a singer and a business owner. And now she does it all for her own film & casting company. She is often in front of the camera. It is important to her career that she look her very best.

Before

"I do exercise and take care of myself," said Vanessa, "however; I knew I wanted to have some cosmetic work done to my smile. I was beginning to notice some minor chips and stains on my teeth."

"Vanessa already had a very good smile," said Dr. Saeid Mohtashami. "When she came into our office for the first time we were blown away by her knowledge of cosmetic dentistry and the procedures. She certainly had been doing her homework. She said she had read many of our recent magazine articles and did most of her research through visiting cosmetic dental websites. When she weighed out education, experience and the final look of our work, she chose us."

Vanessa has a good eye for what is balanced, natural and appealing to others. She could see from the doctor's many before and after photos, his work is exquisite. Every smile looks natural. However, the doctor has a little trick to help him create this natural, balanced and appealing look. Yes, believe it or not, there is a very precise formula of measurement for beauty. It has been used to create many of the things we humans find attractive.

This formula is referred to as the rule of golden proportions. It was derived through the study of things that our species finds attractive naturally. From the shape of the human body, to valleys, mountains, trees and anything else we may deem 'beautiful'; this formula of measurement was created and has been used for centuries to create items of attractiveness such as art, architecture, furniture, automobiles, jewelry and even...teeth.

Dr. Mohtashami continued, "Vanessa already had great teeth. She wanted them to be perfect. First, we whitened her teeth. Then using the golden proportions formula of measurement, I was able to craft 11 cosmetic porcelain veneers for the upper teeth in her smile zone. I hope you agree they look great."

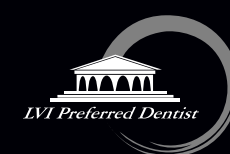

Improving an already good smile requires perfectionism. The rule of golden proportions formula is an asset, however the dentist should be highly trained, part artist and part perfectionist. And according to Vanessa, it also helps if the doctor is sweet, kind patient and has a gentle touch.

The Golden Mean Gauge comes in several sizes for multiple measuring uses. The formula in its simplest form is .618 to 1. For a tooth, the .618 is the width. Therefore the ideal length is 1.618. The tool pictured above can be used to measure teeth and smile proportions. In the hands of a skilled cosmetic dentist like Dr. Mohtashami fantastic natural looking smiles can be created.
